digital video discs), ~~[[,]] and computer instruction signals embodied in a transmission medium (with or without a carrier wave upon which the signals are modulated).~~
~~For example, the transmission medium may include a communications network, such as the Internet.~~

IN THE CLAIMS

Claims 55, 56, and 57 are cancelled.

Claim 1 is replaced with the following version:

1. A method for operating a key distribution center (KDC) that provides keys to facilitate secure communications between clients and servers across a computer network, wherein the KDC operates without having to store long-term server secrets, comprising: receiving a communication from a server that is authenticated at the KDC; wherein the communication includes a temporary secret key to be used in communications with the server for a limited time period, and wherein the temporary secret key is shared between the server and the KDC; and storing the temporary secret key in a database at the KDC, so that the temporary secret key can be subsequently used to facilitate one or more communications between a client and the server, wherein the temporary secret key is encrypted with a public key belonging to the KDC, so that the temporary secret key can only be decrypted using a private key belonging to the KDC; wherein the temporary secret key is a short-term secret which becomes invalid after a short time period; and wherein the server generates a new temporary secret key in response to a request from the KDC for a new temporary secret key to replace the invalid temporary secret key.

Claim 19 is replaced with the following version:

19. A computer-readable storage medium storing instructions that when executed by a computer cause the computer to perform a method for operating a key distribution center (KDC) that provides keys to facilitate secure communications between clients and servers across a computer network, wherein the KDC operates without having to store long-term server secrets, the method comprising: receiving a communication from a server that is authenticated at the KDC; wherein the communication includes a temporary secret key to be used in communications with the server for a limited time period, and wherein the temporary secret key is shared between the server and the KDC; and storing the temporary secret key in a database at the KDC, so that the temporary secret key can be subsequently used to facilitate one or more communications between a client and the server, wherein the temporary secret key is encrypted with a public key belonging to the KDC so that the temporary secret key can only be decrypted using a private key belonging to the KDC; wherein the temporary secret key is a short-term secret which becomes invalid after a short time period; and wherein the server generates a new temporary secret key in response to a request from the KDC for a new temporary secret key to replace the invalid temporary secret key.

Claim 37 is replaced with the following version:

37. An apparatus that provides keys to facilitate secure communications between clients and servers across a computer network, wherein the apparatus operates without having to store long-term server secrets, comprising: a key distribution center (KDC); a receiving mechanism within the KDC that is configured to receive a communication from a server; wherein the communication includes a temporary secret key to be used in communications with the server for a limited time period, and wherein the temporary secret key is shared between the server and the KDC; and a storage mechanism within the KDC that is configured to store the temporary secret key in a database at the KDC, so that the temporary secret key can be subsequently used to facilitate one or more communications between a client and the server, wherein the temporary secret key is encrypted with a public key belonging to the KDC, so that the temporary secret key can only be decrypted using a private key belonging to the KDC; wherein the temporary secret key is a short-term secret which becomes invalid after a short time period; and wherein the server generates a new temporary secret key in response to a request from the KDC for a new temporary secret key to replace the invalid temporary secret key.

Allowable Subject Matter

3. Claims 1-11, 13-29, 31-47, and 49-54 are allowed.

4. The following is an examiner's statement of reasons for allowance:

The closest prior art in the field does not teach the features of the claimed invention of: a server initiating an authentication message exchange with a Key Distribution Center (KDC) where the authentication message contains a temporary secret key to be used in subsequent communications between the server and the KDC, where the temporary secret key is stored in the KDC so as to be used to facilitate communications between a client and the server, where the temporary secret key is stored at the KDC encrypted with a public key of the KDC, where the temporary secret key becomes invalid after a short time period and a new replacement secret key is generated by the server upon request by the KDC. All in the manner of the applicant as found in the independent claims and disclosed in the Applicant's specification.

Any comments considered necessary by applicant must be submitted no later than the payment of the issue fee and, to avoid processing delays, should preferably accompany the issue fee. Such submissions should be clearly labeled "Comments on Statement of Reasons for Allowance."
